

SEX FOR MONEY

Would you pay someone to have sex with you? Would you pay for a pleasure that could hurt someone else? Your way truly must see that sex is not an evil act, but there should be a boundary in how you lay with another.

Should there be legal prostitution? How would our society function with a legal plan in permitting to pay? Where would the tax laws be implemented in this very major arena called sex? You pay for dinner at the restaurant; with that fee, it is assumed that dinner will include sexual contact. They may say they would never walk in this act, yet they pay for their evening date.

What is wrong with paying for something so intimate? What about Yahweh's plan of giving a connection with the others that you sleep with? Paying for sex will not make it taxable, nor will it make the act free from joining with others in soulish ways, with soul ties.

When you pay for sex, others can become hurt by you and your habit of giving up a valued part that is safe with your lover in marriage. Sex should be freely given and only with your partner in marriage details.

Giving up sex for money is to ignore what sex really entails. To have sex is to join. To have payment to join others spiritually is to not look at your purpose in living. When sex is expected, if the house payment is paid, you are giving up sex for a roof. Where you give sex for physical objects or security blankets within, you are getting paid as if they were engaging your way with money.

Sex should be free in marriage. Should you pay your spouse for what is theirs to share with you? There should be a mutual sharing of each other. Nothing should be given to have that pleasure. Nothing should be taken away based on how the bills are not being paid. There must be an understanding of how one spouse belongs to the other.

A woman is usually in another state of emotional health to have strangers touch her repeatedly for money. Where would the disconnect happen? At the sight of the stranger. After having strangers touch you often, the way you are with those you care for has a detail centered in trauma, for your brain cannot give separate touches to the one you love while others torment you by violating your body. Rape is not the same, yet trauma can occur during both forms of encounter.

The money seems good and worth others using you. But you will lack full engagement in your other relationships, where you have torment in your memory; then, life doesn't seem worth living, and the end never justified all of the abuse by being paid for sex.

The power to lay hands and transfer a demon is a real action, and you should not give a stranger that plan to fill you with all they have within. Now, with others who have many strangers touch them, in swinging and club scenes and stripper dealings: How much do you have to drink to take in what is happening around you? How can you feel pleasure in touching strangers?

How can we break this vicious cycle? You have to say that you will come and deal with the root detail of why you are willing to take on deep trauma. I learned a lot through dealing with others, yet I can say that He, referring to Yahweh, had to bring His freedom, not given through earthly striving.

I have seen a lot of pain in girls who always wanted to feel pretty and needed to feel love and acceptance from a male figure in their household. Breaking the cycle of paying for sex will require a real understanding of how Yahweh made the human—body, soul, and spirit—and when there is a joining with a person, there is a real connection that will stay unless there is a spiritual release.

There will be true freedom when a release is laid bare. Now is the time to educate others on how sex can take on other plans surpassing one sex night.

Come to King Jesus. Ask the Great Way to bring healing, forgiveness, and Kingdom purpose into your way. Don't let others rule over your body. Yield to Yahweh's plan, and give freely in marriage ways, with a mutual sharing based on love found in King Jesus.
